

LION HUNTING WITH OLD DAYS SAFARIS

... Hunting Africa the old traditional way !

This is one of the few reserves in South Africa where lions still roam in the wild open vast areas and hunt for their prey. While stalking and tracking for lion, it is often that you will encounter huge elephants bulls, wandering between the breeding herds, as well as an exceptional variety of game such as giraffe, eland, zebra, kudu, wildebeest amongst others, which will remind you of old safaris that you once read and dreamt about thinking true hunting in Africa was something of the past... or perhaps only for the very wealthy who can also afford 3 weeks safaris with 30% chances of success?

Old days Safaris offers you the real challenge of a lion on foot. The skilful tracking and pursuit of this incredible animal in his own terrain will make you fall in love with your safari. Since baiting is not permitted in South Africa, we have to look for fresh tracks in the morning and then follow these as quietly as possible, knowing the lion will almost certainly sense you and start his escape route through the most difficult terrains. It is here where you will witness and be part of the unreal ability of our trackers to follow the spoor for endless hours through the most impenetrable thickets of the reserve. As a hunter from a "civilized" world, we fail to understand their incredible natural ability and skill to track, almost like a sixth sense that our forefather hunters had, but has somehow disappeared through generations. Often you will think they have lost the track, or even get the feeling you are being fooled....and then suddenly you are amazed and feel their excitement when they show you just a glimpse of a footprint, a stone overturned or a small broken branch we as hunters would never have noticed.

The hunt inevitably finishes on a fight at close range, when at some stage, our prey will decide to change roles. From that moment you will experience the feeling that your heart will jump out of your chest... You hear the lion roaring in the thick bush in front of you sensing the pursuit will never end and the trackers will continue to follow through the thick riverine along the river. The lion decides he is not going to run, but instead stands his ground.... This is when you will have to approach very closely and carefully... and it is these last few seconds, with an overwhelming challenging fear of pursuit, that will forever be engraved in your memory !
